

CMCL Undergraduate Richard Scinteie Awarded Palmer-Brandon Prize

CMCL junior Richard Scinteie was recently awarded the prestigious Palmer-Brandon Prize, which is the College of Arts and Science's most generous award for undergraduate students majoring in the humanities.

Richard's interests are wide-ranging, which is evidenced by his pursuit of 3 undergraduate majors: CMCL, Spanish, and International Studies. He plans to spend the 2010-2011 academic year studying in Madrid.

He will almost certainly continue his education at the graduate level, though he is undecided about whether he will study law, rhetoric, international public policy, West European studies, or some combination of these. His dream job would be working as a diplomat for the European Union or the United Nations, helping to facilitate relationships between national bodies.
