Principal Experience

- January, 2004 - present Professor of Public Affairs and Philanthropic Studies
Indiana University, Bloomington, Indiana

Founder and Co-Director
Certificate in Social Entrepreneurship: Nonprofit and Public
Benefit Organizations
Indiana University, Bloomington and Indianapolis, Indiana

September 2004-
December 2009
Director of Graduate Programs
The Center on Philanthropy at Indiana University
Indianapolis, Indiana

In addition to teaching graduate courses in Indianapolis, I oversaw the graduate programs of the Center on Philanthropy, including the M.A. in Philanthropic Studies, the Executive M.A. in Philanthropic Studies, and the Ph.D. in Philanthropic Studies, a newly begun program, which is unique to Indiana University.

September, 2003 -
December, 2003
Visiting Fellow
American Enterprise Institute, Washington, D. C.

Prior to returning to Indiana University, I received a grant from the Kellogg Foundation to write a series of articles on national service and other topics related to public policy affecting nonprofit organizations.

October, 2001 -
August, 2003
CEO, Corporation for National and Community Service
Washington, D. C.

After nomination by President George W. Bush and confirmation by the United States Senate, I served as the chief executive officer of an independent federal agency whose missions are to engage Americans in meeting unmet domestic needs through voluntary service and to renew the ethic of civic responsibility in the United States. The Corporation operates three major programs: AmeriCorps, Learn & Serve America, and Senior Corps. It has a budget of approximately $1 billion and employs over 600 people, with offices in Washington and every state. Close to two million Americans are estimated to be involved in its programs.

As CEO, my major accomplishments have been to build bipartisan support for the Corporation's programs, address longstanding management problems, and help launch a major Presidential initiative aimed at promoting voluntary service, with a special focus on homeland security. I have worked closely with senior officials in the Executive Office of the President and several Cabinet departments. I have testified numerous times before Congressional committees, as well as met regularly with individual members of Congress. I have addressed the National Press Club, the City Club of Cleveland, and many other organizations, as well as been interviewed frequently by print and broadcast journalists.

September, 1997 -
October, 2001 Professor of Philanthropic Studies and Public Policy
Indiana University - Purdue University at Indianapolis
Indianapolis, Indiana

As a member of the faculties of the College of Liberal Arts and School of Public and Environmental Affairs, I was responsible for teaching, research and writing on a wide range of topics for both scholarly audiences and the general public. I was also a research associate of the Indiana University Center on Philanthropy, a twelve-year-old organization that seeks to improve research and teaching about, as well as the practice of philanthropy. I taught three graduate-level courses per year, plus an executive education course through distance learning. I served as advisor to numerous M.A. and M.P.A. candidates, as well as to two Ph.D. candidates.

In the summer of 1999, I created the Institute on Philanthropy and Voluntary Service, a unique program for undergraduates from throughout the United States who lead campus service programs. I chaired the Academic Program Committee of the Philanthropic Studies faculty and served on the Academic Affairs Committee of the College of Liberal Arts, among other faculty responsibilities. I was on course to receive tenure when I took leave from the university for government service.

August, 1990 -
September, 1997 President
Hudson Institute
Indianapolis, Indiana

Hudson Institute is a thirty-year-old research organization that conducts studies and related activities on a wide range of domestic and international public policy issues. The President is the Chief Executive Officer and responsible for all aspects, including fund-raising, of this $7 million, 80-employee organization.

Major accomplishments included doubling the institute's budget, developing new programs in education, welfare, and regulatory policy, launching the institute's first capital campaign, and recruiting several prominent researchers and trustees.

October, 1985 -
August, 1990 President
Institute for Educational Affairs

Washington, D. C.

The Institute for Educational Affairs was a non-profit organization that assisted foundations, corporations, and individuals with their grant-making activities, especially with regard to higher education. As Chief Executive Officer, the President was responsible for all aspects of its program and administration. Reporting directly to the Board of Directors, the President's duties included fund-raising, program development, supervision of grants for work in higher education, journalism, public policy and other areas, maintenance of a network of grant-makers, public relations, and assuring compliance with pertinent legal and fiscal standards.

Major accomplishments included leading the institute through a period of major reorganization, increasing its budget by 33 percent, and expanding its major programs. Upon my leaving, the institute was merged with another organization.

October, 1983 -
June, 1984

Assistant & Deputy Director
United States Information Agency
Washington, D. C.

Under a broad delegation of responsibility and authority from the Director of the Agency, the Deputy Director was charged with implementing the Administration's policies through oversight and direction of USIA operations, personnel, and facilities in the United States and abroad. The Deputy Director's duties also included working regularly with senior officials in the Department of State, the White House, and the Congress, as well as with the private sector and with the press, on a wide range of international and educational activities. During this period, USIA had a staff of more than 8,000 people and a budget in excess of $600 million.

February, 1976 -
September, 1983

Director of Research
Smith Richardson Foundation, Inc.
New York, New York

As chief program officer of a grant-giving foundation, responsible to the President and the Board of Trustees, the Director of Research was charged with developing, reviewing, and monitoring projects dealing with a wide range of public policy issues, both foreign and domestic. The Director of Research also worked closely with numerous non-profit organizations, as well as with the public sector and the press, to advance the Foundation's objectives.

During this period, the Smith Richardson Foundation had a staff of six, gave grants totaling up to $3 million annually, and achieved national acclaim for its activities.
